

Student: Matthew Ryan

Final Grade: C

Total Score: 7.0

Summary

The student asserts that Arthur is controlled by fate through divine intervention, using the sword in the stone miracle and his survival in battles as evidence of God's plan.

Criterion 1

Score: 4.0 The essay accurately references key events from chapters V-VI (sword in the stone and proving his right) and IX (battles against rebels), correctly linking them to divine signs and providence as described in the reading material.

Criterion 2

Score: 3.0 The analysis connects these events to fate and God's plan effectively but does not address or contrast with fortune, limiting depth; it uses relevant examples but could explore providence more thoroughly.

Overall Comment

This response demonstrates a solid grasp of fate and providence through textual examples but would be stronger with a clearer distinction from fortune and additional supporting details.

Essay Text (excerpt)

Complete a rough draft on your own paper before writing your finished draft here. Cannot turn in without a rough draft. Name: Matthew Ryan Arthur is controlled by fate, not by fortune. This is proven when he pulls the sword from the stone when many have failed time and time again. When people learned of this, some said it was a sign from God, while others said it was a lie, so he proved his right over and over. This made him king because it was said whoever could pull it out would be king. When he was crowned king, he led many battles against rebel kings. Arthur survived because of fate, God's plan. He never knew if one battle was going to be his last. Fate is always unknown to man, but God knows what fate brings upon everyone. Therefore, that which controls it is God's plan upon Arthur.