

Student: Deegan

Final Grade: D

Total Score: 6.0

Summary

The essay argues that Arthur's life was controlled by fate rather than fortune because his circumstances rose from a low point in childhood to the high of kingship without the cyclical ups and downs typical of fortune's wheel. It uses his birth and ascension to the throne as evidence to support this view.

Criterion 1

Score: 3.0 The thesis clearly distinguishes fate from fortune but misinterprets fortune as requiring constant cycles, with limited and somewhat inaccurate textual references; evidence is general rather than specific to the reading material.

Criterion 2

Score: 3.0 The essay has a basic structure with an introduction, body, and conclusion, but phrasing is awkward and repetitive, with some unclear concepts that affect overall clarity.

Overall Comment

This essay shows a reasonable attempt to engage with the theme but would benefit from more precise textual evidence and a clearer explanation of fortune's role. Developing ideas with direct quotes could strengthen the argument.

Essay Text (excerpt)

Complete a rough draft on your own paper before writing your finished draft here. Cannot turn in without a rough draft. Name: Deegan In my opinion, Arthur's life was controlled by fate and not fortune. His life was lived through an undeniable quick sequence of events, pointing toward fate. In order to live a life of fortune, you must experience the highs and lows in a never-ending cycle. But this concept—this concept—was never really applicable in Arthur's life, and I intend to explain why. After Arthur is born, he wasn't even provided a household with any positive qualities. He lived a life of fortune; this would have to be the lowest point in his life, but on the wheel, I would argue a middle point at the lowest. After boyhood, he inherits the king's throne, where he would stay throughout the end of our reading. This would be the very top of the wheel, but really it stops there. His life was round from middle ladder to the top, and it never changed from that point on. To truly experience fortune, you must experience the highs and lows frequently, and he didn't. Instead, his life was lived through a series of events deemed by a higher power. This explains why his life was lived through fate, and not fortune. In conclusion, many examples and evidence have been provided as to why Arthur's life was lived through fate and not fortune. Fortune requires a never-ending change of high points to low points, and fate is what is set to happen in your life. Overall, this ...