

Student: Matthew Ryan

Final Grade: D

Total Score: 6.0

Summary

The essay claims Arthur's life is governed by fate, exemplified by his divinely ordained pulling of the sword from the stone and survival in battles against rebel kings as part of God's plan. It emphasizes the unknowable nature of fate to humans.

Criterion 1

Score: 4.0 The thesis is straightforward and supported by relevant specific events from the text, effectively linking them to divine fate, though it largely ignores the fortune aspect of the prompt.

Criterion 2

Score: 2.0 Organization is simple with two paragraphs focusing on key events, but the essay is brief and lacks smooth transitions or a strong conclusion, leading to some abruptness in clarity.

Overall Comment

Strong use of concrete examples demonstrates good comprehension of the material, but expanding on the contrast with fortune and improving structure would make the response more complete. Consider adding a concluding summary for better cohesion.

Essay Text (excerpt)

Complete a rough draft on your own paper before writing your finished draft here. Cannot turn in without a rough draft. Name: Matthew Ryan Arthur is controlled by fate, not by fortune. This is proven when he pulls the sword from the stone when many have failed time and time again. When people learned of this, some said it was a sign from God, while others said it was a lie, so he proved his right over and over. This made him king because it was said whoever could pull it out would be king. When he was crowned king, he led many battles against rebel kings. Arthur survived because of fate, God's plan. He never knew if one battle was going to be his last. Fate is always unknown to man, but God knows what fate brings upon everyone. Therefore, that which controls it is God's plan upon Arthur.
